

View of the planned TAYAL mega project.

TAYAL: Textile mega project in Algeria

Brückner supplies the dry finishing lines for Denim, non-Denim, knitted fabrics.

A joint venture between the state-owned Algerian companies Groupe C&H, TEXALG, SNTA and the Turkish Group TAY will build one of the biggest textile mills. This mega project comprises several stages which will be realized within next few years.

On a ground of about 2,500,000 sqm and with an investment volume of 800,000,000 USD, several vertically structured textile plants will be built in the next years, specializing in various categories of textile end products. What is especially great is that the new company is going to have also a huge internal service and training centre for many new workers.

Brückner is awarded the contract for the supply, installation and commissioning of many machines for dry finishing. The selection of possible machine suppliers was made according to three main criteria: productivity, quality of the products and highest possible energy efficiency. In addition, the team focused on the available local service as well as on fast and flexible after sales services.

Brückner was chosen in dry finishing as best option in all the above mentioned points. As family-owned and family-run company Brückner imparts trust and confidence in a faithful cooperation in future, too.

The first step of the project has been divided into a Denim, a non-Denim and a knitwear section. The machinery in question are complete, fully integrated production lines for the production of 12 million trousers, 6 million shirts and 12 million t-shirts each year. The scope of supply comprises several stenters, sanfor ranges, thermosol dyeing and highly flexible Denim finishing lines. All these machines are custom-made and are provided with many options.

According to Brückner, the preparations to realize the next stage, which comprises the production of home textiles, are already under way. ♦